Travels With David Peterson: The 11th Annual Henry Fukuhara Manzanar Workshop and Utah Painting Trip

I took off in my car early Friday. I had far too much paint and paper for this trip, but I was going to try and use it all. That evening before dinner in Lone Pine I was a painting in Manzanar. Saturday I joined the workshop in the Alabama Hills where Bill Anderson presented the painting demonstration. The next day we met at Manzanar National Monument where I painted and sketched around the former re-location camp and finally arrived at my "good luck" spot where I have produced memorable paintings in years past and painted another one which I sold that night out of my critique mat! The next day we met at Keeler for a demo by Dan Dickman at the old school house. We then dispersed around this "living" ghost town and painted our own interpretations. I love Keeler for its utility poles, trucks and mobile homes.

This year, instead of heading home, I left Keeler and went through Death Valley, past Rhyolite, and down through Las Vegas and on to the Russell Black home near St. George, sketching and painting all along the way. I was a guest at Russell's home and went with him to his classes for the first two days in the morning and in the afternoon painted in Snow Canyon and in Pine Valley, Utah. Then Russell and I went to Zion National Park each of the last two days of my visit. I could spend a lifetime painting Zion, but we did our best in the two days we had. On Friday Russell and I were exhausted, each of us having created a dozen memorable paintings. I left St. George on Saturday, stopped off for a painting in Rhyolite and drove through Death Valley to Lone Pine. I painted into the evening in the Alabamas and then on Sunday returned home just in time for Mothers' Day.

The 11th Annual Henry Fukuhara Workshop, organized by Al Seton at the Alabama Hills and Manzanar, was on May 3rd and 4th, 2008; A Paint-out in Lone Pine on Friday, May 2nd was held as well as another demo and paint-out at Keeler on Monday May 5th. A group show of the participants' work is at APC Fine Arts Gallery, 1613 Cabrillo Way, Torrance, CA 90505, August 16-September 13, 2008.

Hiding Art

Once I took part in an art show of a dozen artists located in a far off village in a bat-infested warehouse. We hauled our art two hundred miles, hung our show, and yes, it was beautiful. We got the place cleaned up, the lights fixed, had a reception and left. The art was hidden. Who could find it? Away from Main Street, in the country, no signs and on a dead-end road. Our art was hidden for the length of the show.

Yes, I have done this before. I did a one-man show in a library conference room that stayed darkened except for story time and for meetings. I did it twice!

I have placed art in donut shops, crepe shops and cafes. I have hidden art in Carmichael, Vacaville, West Sacramento and in the Suisun Valley (You know where that is, don't you?) And recently it was hiding in the mezzanine floor of an office building in Walnut Creek and in a corner of an Eastern Sierra museum.

I know how to hide art. You can check my web site for directions on how to find it. It may turn up anywhere, like a shoe shop or a wine store, even another library. At a certain downtown library my art was hiding over the copy machines, and next to the restrooms. It might show up in a warehouse at the end of an alley. You could search on Main Street in Downtown Vacaville and find it in a medical supply store.

Having trouble finding my art? Call me. I will gather up some paintings and come to your home, or to the art center or Papayas Cafe (Yet another "hiding place") for a private showing of a selection of my work. Maybe you could acquire one and hide it in your living room!
